TAKE that, Kanye West. Billie Eilish put West in his place with a spectacular headline performance at the world's biggest music festival, Coachella yesterday.

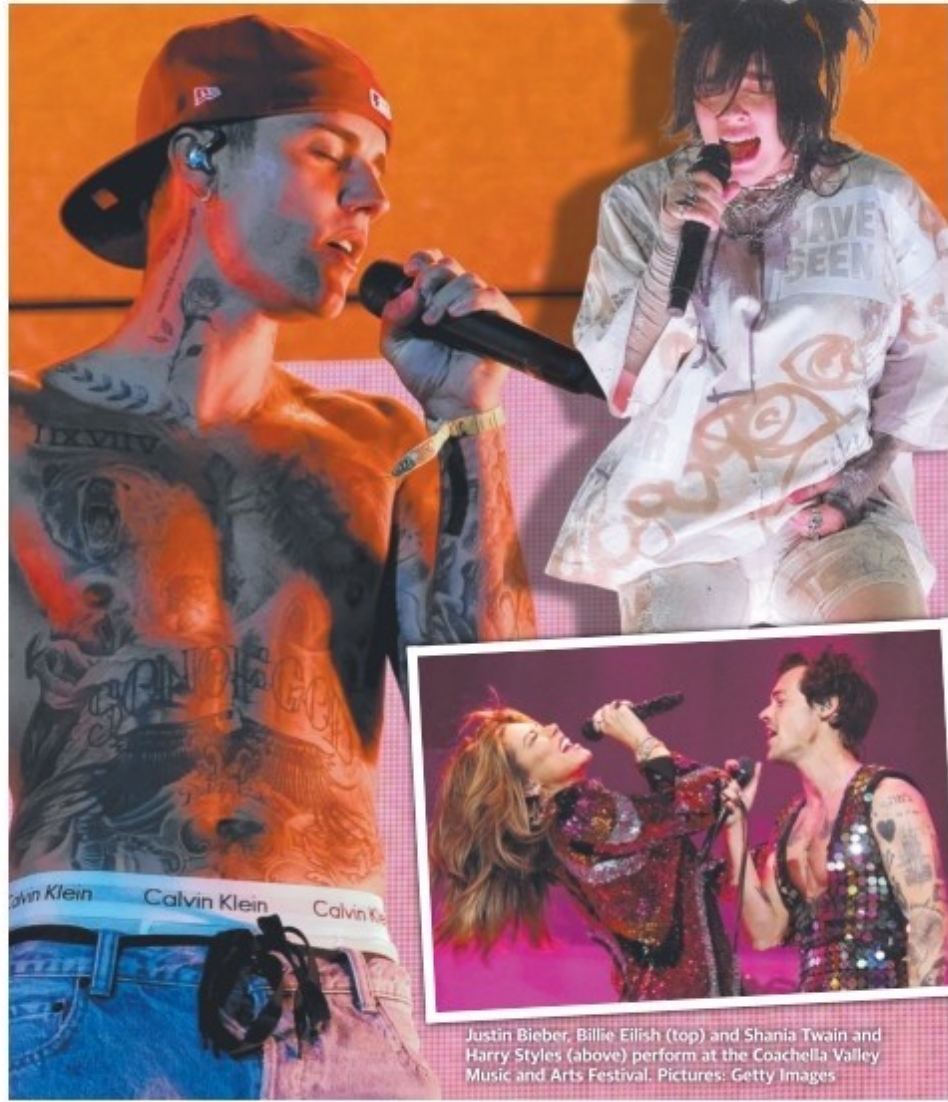

West hit out at 20-year-old Eilish when the 2022 line-up was announced earlier this year, calling on her to apologise to Travis Scott after she had allegedly dissed him during a concert.

Scott was taken off the Coachella line-up after 10 people died and hundreds more were injured when he performed at Astroworld Music Festival, while West was to headline tonight but has been replaced on the bill by The Weeknd.

If Eilish was nervous, she didn't show it. She captivated the 125,000 crowd watching live and millions more online from the first beat, wearing a giant puffer jacket.

"This is a f---ing trip," she said, pulling her hair back with her signature pigtails and wearing comfortable sneakers, bike shorts and an over-size T-shirt.

"Let's all live in this moment. I want us to be grateful that we are alive and that we are breathing and we are here. It has been so long, it has been such a crazy three years and we deserve to feel good and be happy and feel safe and calm."

Contractors' sue threat over pay

THE Andrews government has been accused of short-changing small businesses by $15m on a major roads project, with some contractors still unpaid a year later.

blowouts, leaving subcontractors out of pocket.

A group is now pushing for the state government, which commissioned the project, to pay the money to help businesses grow into bigger construction firms.

But instead of benefiting from the work, they were millions out of pocket and facing severe financial stress.

"The state has a responsibility to make sure who they engage with are ethical companies.

"What I'd like to see of the government is to make it harder for companies to go under.

urgent response about how subcontractors could recoup their losses.

But the state government has pointed to a complex layer of contractors and says it has no role in paying these companies for work.
